

Microsoft TechNet

Biweekly IT Newsletter

Let us know what interests you, and we'll customize your TechNet Flash newsletter with additional reports on topics such as desktop operating systems, server technologies, or security. And please let us know what you think of TechNet Flash.

From the Editor

In the last TechNet flash editorial I wrote, I mentioned the change in the way the team is doing blogging. This week I'll talk a little more about what we have done.

You will still find Rick and Damir blogging away over at the Canadian IT Pro blog, whereas Bruce and I are spending our time over at the Canadian IT Managers Blog.

Let me explain a little bit about the change, and specifically the blog that I manage, the Canadian IT Managers blog. The reason for the change, and the reason that we started the Canadian IT Managers blog, was to provide more content that was specifically targeted towards the audience (that's you, the reader). What that meant for the Managers blog was that we needed to provide not only Microsoft's view, but also the view from others out in the industry. We engaged with Stephen Ibaraki to help provide industry insight and to provide a different viewpoint.

What we have also done on the Managers blog is to invite Guest Bloggers to contribute content. These are names that you might recognize from your community, Graham Jones and DJ Dunkerley in Vancouver, Mitch Tulloch in Winnipeg, Adam Cole and Val Matison in Toronto. The idea here is to get some input and perspective from fellow IT Managers and peers, to share the thoughts, ideas, and discussions that some of you are already having, with a broader audience.

Finally, and most importantly, this is about you (the reader). The Canadian IT Managers blog is a forum in which we encourage you to provide feedback. If there is something that you don't agree with, let us know. If there is something that you would like to see, let us know. If you have something to say, let me know - I'm always looking for new guest bloggers, who knows, next time, your name could be going out as part of the TechNet flash.

Until next time,
Barnaby
